Affinity Spanish Provides Multi-Language Translator (Interpreter) Support for Conferences and Events Nationwide

Denver, Colorado, May 17, 2007 – Affinity Spanish Language Solutions today announced the availability of conference translators for assignments across the US. Conference translators (more correctly interpreters) are in high demand during the prime summer and fall months for many conference, tour, and event venues nationwide. For the 2007 conference season Affinity Spanish will provide support for all major languages in addition to Spanish.

According to Affinity Spanish director Ron McCoy, "For events that attract non-English speaking attendees, language support delivered by professional conference translators and interpreters has become essential." McCoy continued, "Conference organizers want to maximize the experience of their attendees. Information and interaction in the context of native languages provides an infinitely more immersive experience than having attendees struggle to understand programmatic content in English when it's not their first language." Affinity Spanish is centrally located in Denver, Colorado, and can dispatch conference translators from their home office or contract with reliable language support specialists near the venue's location. The company provides language support for events of all sizes.
